MND Association of Australia needs

Australia is a vast country with a low population density of 21 million people. There are approximately 1400 people living with MND at any given time. Some people living in large metropolitan areas are able to access MND multidisciplinary clinics and skilled health and community support. Others may only be able to access a local primary health care practitioner with no experience of MND. Inequitable access and distribution of health practitioners is an issue for people living with MND in Australia. A national audit to document the care and support provided will assist MND Australia to influence governments and work towards the development of National MND Standards of Care.
